

Negotiating Life

Passing an edge
something waits,

knotted to talk.
What I know

diminishes with new truces struck.

They empty,
leaving ribbons and

wax,
and me,
diplomats.